The Future for FourBlock

Letter from the Founder & CEO

As I reflect on the past year, I am grateful to the veterans and military spouses who trusted FourBlock with their transition journeys—and to the employers, donors, volunteers, and partners who made that work possible. Transitioning from military service is about more than finding a job. It requires translating experience, building new relationships, and finding renewed purpose in the civilian workforce. FourBlock exists to help bridge that gap.

This year, we expanded our reach, strengthened our programs and partnerships, and invested in the tools and systems needed to support long-term career success. As we look ahead, our commitment remains clear: to ensure every veteran and military spouse has the opportunity to build a meaningful career and continue leading with purpose.

THE CHALLENGE WE ARE ADDRESSING

We offer a systems-level solution to a national challenge by connecting employers, industries, and communities with a generation of high potential talent. At the same time, we support veterans in overcoming the personal challenges during their transition, helping them reconnect with purpose and meaningful careers.

OUR STORY

15 years ago, FourBlock was founded on a simple but powerful belief: meaningful employment changes lives. Inspired by a WWII veteran who said, "A good job saved my life," our name reflects the military concept of the "Three Block War." We are the Fourth Block - the final mission and journey home, where service members transition from military service to meaningful civilian careers and continue serving their communities in new ways.

"FourBlock was there for me when I needed them the most. There's no way I would be where I am today without FourBlock."
